ARTS

The arts provide a valuable mirror for our society, offering us a means of self-reflection that we might not otherwise have in our lives. Through the building and strengthening of our creative and critical faculties, the arts bring us inspiration, insight, entertainment, and a fuller sense of our place in the world. Through the lens of culture, we are better able to appreciate and evaluate the ideas, relationships, and activities that surround and engage us every day. By supporting arts programs for students (especially those in inner-city school districts which often neglect such areas of learning), combating the problem of declining theatre attendance by developing diverse audiences, and instilling an appreciation of what culture can offer, EFA is working to keep the arts available to everyone.

ENVIRONMENT

In 1999, EFA continued to make environmental issues its primary area of funding. Priorities included innovative approaches to sustainable agriculture, managing health hazards associated with nuclear contamination, building the capacity of family farms, and participating in shareholder activism campaigns to improve the ecological consciousness and performance of major businesses. EFA looks to the future when it comes to environmental issues, as they change from year to year; such is the nature of a field inextricably bound to scientific progress. Entering the 21st century, EFA is working to develop new leadership for the environmental movement, supporting growing environmental awareness through massive initiatives such as Earth Day 2000, and concentrating on new scientific issues that are rapidly becoming a central concern to the population, such as genetically modified foods, bio-piracy, and bio-pollution. For the foreseeable future, EFA will continue its financial stewardship role by providing funds to influence and support results-driven projects and programs, especially those that unite non-traditional partners in work toward environmental sustainability.

HUMAN SERVICES

In the area of Human Services (currently EFA's most modest area of giving), the foundation dedicates its resources towards bettering the lives of the disadvantaged. In 1999, EFA funding supported services such as counseling and job training programs for recovered alcoholics and former drug users, and adult day services and outreach programs to assist the frail elderly, disabled, and economically disadvantaged population in continuing to live with dignity and independence. EFA stands by its commitment to promote equity and well-being for all people, strengthening communities by building on the potential within every individual.

NATIVE AMERICAN ISSUES

Improving the lives and preserving the culture of North American native peoples has long been the goal of EFA's native grant giving. In 1999, EFA maintained its funding commitment to Native American issues, especially those that educate children and tribal communities as a whole; ensure growth and cultural sustainability; promote environmental conservation of native lands; encourage better health habits; foster artistic expression; and strive to preserve the historical and cultural treasures of the past (through art, language, tradition, historical record, etc). For the foreseeable future, EFA will continue its support of programs that reflect the needs of Native Americans and their communities.

POPULATION

EFA has traditionally supported the protection of individual reproductive choice through advocacy and litigation at state and federal levels, equipping pro-choice policymakers and activists with information to further pro-choice objectives. The Board favors preventive measures by supporting projects emphasizing contraceptive development and sexual health education. EFA's ultimate goal in funding population-related programs is to ensure that reproductive health services are available to all regardless of race, religion, or economic status.
